

When Zoë Kravitz, 25, took on her role in Divergent, she wasn't just signing up to be the kick-ass ally. She was also following in the footsteps of dad Lenny Kravitz, the legendary rocker who plays Cinna in The Hunger Games. "We're both surprised we're involved in any of this!" she jokes to Us of the blockbuster franchises. "We think it's funny." Yet having a famous father didn't mean getting shortcuts to success. "My dad was brought up very old-school, very strict... So he's wearing leather pants and a boa, but he would be like, 'Did you do your chores today?'" Nor was she allowed to stay up past bedtime when the Rolling Stones' Mick Jagger came over to party till dawn. But the only child of Kravitz and actress Lisa Bonet admits to Us that she did get at least one celeb perk: "Madonna used to babysit me. She told me so!"

You play Tris' confidante, Christina. Tell Us about her.

Christina is from the Candor faction. She has no filter. She just says exactly what she thinks and is unapologetic about it, which I'm very much like. I think that's what attracted me to her!

Christina and Tris are best friends, so did you and Shailene Woodley make sure to spend time bonding?

Actually, we had a lot of mutual friends beforehand. We hadn't met, but we'd heard a lot about each other. And then, well, on the set, there were a lot of guys, so it was really good to have another chick around to talk and hang out with. We liked to go to the farmers' market and cook dinner together. She makes this amazing turkey with mushrooms and peppers, and I would make all kinds of quinoa as a side dish.

As for the rest of the cast?

Oh, we all went through serious boot camp before filming. It was actually really fun bonding! Although it was intense too: running, pushups, fight choreography, gun training, hitting punching bags till our knuckles were bloody. I couldn't walk for a week after.

Whoa, you became a true fighter!

No. My knife-throwing was so bad, it was embarrassing! I'd try to look badass on camera, while my knives were clattering on the floor. [Laughs.] Miles Teller was actually good at it. And Theo James is an amazing fighter. I would not want to make him angry!

Theo sounds pretty intimidating!

He's actually so goofy. He goes from being this heartthrob to just being a nut and making fun of himself. Those Brits!

Seems like everyone bonded like a real class of Dauntless initiates.

It was a very communal set. We were the goofiest, most inappropriate people in the world, which made it fun because many of the scenes were so serious.

Did you guys hang out off the set?

We did! Erykah Badu was playing in Chicago, where we filmed, and she's one of my favorite musicians, so I got everyone tickets. That was fun! [Recalls costar Ben Lloyd-Hughes, "We were sitting around saying, 'Oh, it'd be cool to go the Erykah Badu concert.' And Zoë's like, 'Erykah's a good friend. I'll send her a text.' Ten minutes later, she checks her phone: 'It's cool. I got you all VIP passes.' That's her life! We were backstage! But Zoë is so down-to-earth about it."]

Jennifer Lawrence told Us you two besties hung out a lot when she filmed the first Hunger Games. Do you guys still see each other?

Yeah, she's my friend favorite! Jen and I are homebodies. Her life is so crazy now that when we hang, we usually end up at home watching Fear Factor or Scare Tactics [Syfy's hidden-camera prank show], where they pretend to do really crazy, f--ked-up, scary things!

Now, like Jen, you're starring in a young-adult blockbuster too. Have you asked her for advice?

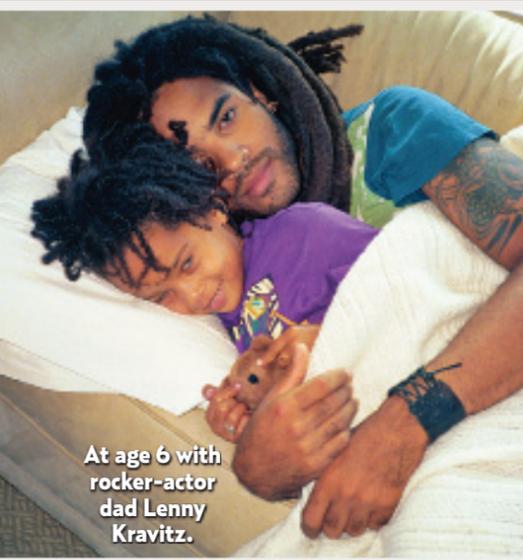

When I got the part, I obviously called her to talk about it! I mean, I'm not the lead — and I'm sure Shailene's life will drastically change — but it's intense being in any spotlight. Jen told me, "If you believe in the story and you like the script, then you should do it."

With her band, Lolawolf.

She and Lawrence met filming 2011's X-Men: First Class.

At age 6 with rocker-actor dad Lenny Kravitz.
